Suggested answer:

Felix stood up to leave and he remembered about the novel by Stendhal, which he had left on the corner of the table. He handed it to Titi and asked him if he had read it. Titi/The latter shook his head; he hadn't; he picked up the book as if it were a valuable album and leafed through it with his fingers next to the edge of the pages. In fact he was looking at the drawings/pictures mainly. A few days elapsed and Felix did not find it in himself to go to Aglae's uninvited. In the meantime he had been out/ downtown for a few times gathering information regarding the beginning of the academic year and had wandered around the antiquary shops on the banks of the Dâmbovița.
